

DEFENSIVE SCOUTING REPORT CÓRDOBA

P&R Defense:

- Plug & Hedge Coverage:
 - o They try to avoid short roll situations with the ball handler holding the Roll Man.
 - o X-Out rotations on Close Outs.
 - o Last switch occurs on passes to the back in Top PnR Top and to the face in Slot PnR.
 - o Black (#4) struggles in last switches.
- Fake Show: They played especially against Luis García (Toledo), Tiago Dias (Toledo), and Adrià Domínguez (León).
 - o Luis Garcia (Toledo) punishes them when attacking vertically to the rim, especially in Slot P&R.
- Switch: As an alternative defense, they played more often against León because León didn't have a Center available for the game.
 - o No triple Switch
 - o If Orozco (#10) is not on the court, they can guard the main ball-handler with their SF Guemeta (#35).
 - o If Serigne Lamine is playing as a Center, they always switch on P&R.
- Spain P&R: They struggle against Spain's defense, making mistakes on switching between guards and in recognizing the last player. They allow easy baskets near the rim and open 3-point shots.
- P&R with 4: Always Switch.
 - o Rodríguez (#7) has a bad laterality, and struggles in 1n1 situations against small quick players.

Off Screen Defense:

- Chase: They try to chase on off-ball screens. They step out 5 steps to avoid the curl, and the passer's defender jumps to the ball.
 - o Black (#4) goes late nearly every time on off-ball screens.

Low Post Defense:

- They allow one-on-one situations in all positions; they don't trap, only do small stunts.

1 on 1 Defense:

- Sánchez (#16) and A. Orozco (#11) struggle on defense, especially when playing with contact near the rim.
- Rodríguez (#7) struggles in one-on-one defense against quick players in mismatch situations.
- Black (#4) has major problems in off-ball situations, especially in recognizing defensive positions.
- Sagnia (#17) and Lamine (#8) have excellent lateral mobility to switch on P&R; it's hard to score against them when facing the rim.

Transition Defense:

- One of the best in the league. They can struggle in match-ups if the transition offense is fast, especially when the bigs run.
